More Equity topics, specifically bringing equity to the aspects of the classroom (e.g. testing, assignments, class policies) good speaker, touch on sensitive topics without being insensitive.
Continue examining and engaging with race, socio economics and equity. These topics are very important and we need to address the needs and experiences of our student population. These aren't issues to discuss in the abstract; racism, sexism, bullying and centering white privilege is happening on our campus and in our classrooms. Systemic racism is real. We must continue to deconstruct these oppressive structures that keep our students from achieving their lifelong goals through action-oriented conversations and dialogue.
I learned a lot from Diego Navarro. Please bring him back.
Pedagogy, teaching engagement
Remote/zoom is a wonderful option. A year and a half in, I actually feel I learn more on zoom than in person. It is much easier to engage with the slides, and I can always see the speaker.
Elena Aguilar - author and researcher (former classroom teacher) who coaches educators on equity, team building and creating resilience in educators. She's amazing! Her website: https://brightmorningteam.com/
I've very much enjoyed the focus on marginalized and under-served communities and individuals for the past couple of years.
Dr. Vanson Nguyen who was a speaker at the USC Leadership in Equity Academy this summer.

Any additional comments or suggestions.

Great convocation
Main speaker was great, a more detailed agenda with the names and depts of the other speakers would be helpful.
Stories shared were inspirational
It was impressive listening to students tell their stories and their relationship to Santa Ana College.
It is ALWAYS the highlight when we get to hear from students directly. Thank you for that. Also Madeline Grant shared a great story that really connected with me and the sense of community at SAC.
Fantastic job. Excellent presenter.
The focus on equity is really appreciated!

Other comments or suggestions for the presenter(s).

Favorite quote (although I might be paraphrasing): "Love our students into belonging." I think some DEI conversations focus more about what we DO to include diversity. We also need to assess and personally consider HOW I think about my students... if I truly love each one of them... my actions will follow suit in a genuine, organic manner. What I do will tend to communicate my care and concern for the individual. If I truly love my students as individuals, I will respect and value each one.
Extremely helpful and relevant presentation. Thank you!
Helpful to know that students don't learn effectively (and employees don't help students effectively) if students feel a threat or lack of emotional and psychological safety. This was eye-opening. I also appreciated Diego's suggestion that we do a simple breathing exercise with our students to increase a sense of safety and belonging.
I loved the presenter's focus on how our interactions can encourage or discourage a student.
